School books audit

As the end of the school year quickly approaches, some programs will draw to a close. A major task at the end of each year is to complete a stocktake of the school library. This gives us the opportunity to identify missing or damaged books, as well as plan for future purchases.

As of Friday 2nd December there will be no more borrowing from the school library for students. Please check at home for any books that may belong to the school and return them, to assist us with the library audit. Any books borrowed under your child's name that are not returned, will incur a $5.00 "Replacement Fee".

Take Home Books will not be sent home from Monday 5th December, to allow teachers time to collect and return all books, and check for any missing books. Please ensure you check at home for any books and return them to school to avoid $5.00 "Replacement Fee". Students are still expected to read at home, with appropriate materials found at home, such as their own books, magazines, catalogues, newspapers, etc.

How to encourage kids to be problem-solvers

By Michael Grose

When parents solve all children's problems we not only increase their dependency on adults but we teach kids to be afraid of making mistakes and to blame themselves for not being good enough. That's fertile ground for anxiety and depressive illness.

So, how can we raise kids to be courageous problem-solvers rather than self-critical scaredy cats? Here are three practical ideas to get you started.

1. Turn requests into problems for kids to solve

Kids get used to bringing their problems to parents to solve. If you keep solving them, they'll keep bringing them. 'Mum, my sister is annoying me!' 'Dad, can you ask my teacher to pick me for the team?' 'Hey, I can't find my socks!' It's tempting if you are in a time-poor family to simply jump in and help kids out. Alternatively, you can take a problem-solving approach, cuing them to resolve their own problems and take responsibility for their concerns. 'What can you do to make her stop annoying you?' 'What's the best approach to take with your teacher?' 'Socks, smocks! Where might they be?'

2. Ask good questions to prompt problem-solving

A problem-solving approach relies on asking good questions, which can be challenging if you are used to solving your child's problems. The first question when a child brings you a problem should be: 'Can you handle this on your own?' Next should be, 'What do you want me to do to help you solve the problem?' These questions are not meant to deter children from coming to you; rather, to encourage and teach them to start working through their own concerns themselves.

3. Coach them through problems and concerns

So, your child feels she was unfairly left out of a school sports team by a teacher and asks you get involved. The easiest solution may be to meet with the teacher and find out what's going on. You may or not resolve the problem but in doing so you are teaching a child to become dependent on you. Alternatively, you could coach your child to speak to the teacher herself and find out why she was left out. Obviously, there are times when children need their parents to be advocates for them such as when they are being bullied, but we need to make the most of the opportunities for children to speak for themselves. Better to help your child find the right words to use and discuss the best way to approach another person when they have problems. These are great skills to take into adulthood.
